The casualties are numerous, officials anticipate seeing perch, bass, muskie,

The Adventures of...

Rocket Man

by Doug Smith

Lost on Earth

Rocket Man has learned more when he's lost than he has when he knew where he was. And two recent voyages have convinced him that he'll never, ever, gear up with one of those pathfinding devices.

This is not a function of age or fear of change. Back when computers were kerosene-powered he was the first in his class to demonstrate to others how to cope with crashes. And when, two decades ago, We Care Transportation introduced global positioning, he was perfectly content to let some eye in the sky tell him he was southbound under the Peace Bridge and going too fast. Fair enough for a dispatch-intense business, but as for private travel, forget it. He could decipher a road map since before he took off the training wheels and except for the refolding, has never found anything that beats paper navigation.

Nonetheless, he never gives directions when co-piloting and so sat mumly as his Firstborn motored south out of central Pennsylvania, about 100 miles to a playoff game near the Maryland border. (Would Garmins have condemned Mason & Dixon to the unemployment lines?) Anyway, we reached the fork in the road where the automated tourguide directed us to go straight and both of us knew darned well we should bend toward the east.

On she persisted, through one narrow street after the other. At least we got to observe that Pennsylvania's state capital underbelly is no more distended than our own. "I can't believe she's putting us back on 83," the Firstborn moaned a half-hour later as we cut across three lanes of traffic to the Interstate we'd abandoned at her behest.

Somehow, we made first pitch. But we'll never determine why Miss Garmin guided us through the worst Harrisburg has to offer. Maybe she's getting a kickback from a squeegee man.

A few days later, Rocket Man lifted off from the Little Booster's school in central New York. Funny how these trips almost always have to do with baseball but anyway, he determined that mapless and hapless he would try to negotiate Finger Lakes backroads to return to home base.

Only for a moment did he think, "Boy, I could do this easy with GPS." Navigating only by dead reckoning and a few street names he'd acquired over a decade, he set out. What an adventure. How else would he have found Sovocal Hill, the Mennonite lady who took the First Mate's flower order over a cell phone, the self-serve strawberry stand that warned "you are being both monitored and recorded, no switching of berries, please," and, finally, the Outhouse Road By-pass. (Talk about knowing where you're going.)

Downtown Harrisburg aside, GPS may be swell for getting you where you're going, but en route, you will miss where you've been. The search is worth time lost. See ya'.
