Jackalope Sighting in Buffalo

This Jackalope was spotted recently on the rocks near the Niagara River on Unity Island.

Half-antelope, half-jack-rabbit found it is way into Buffalo recently near Unity Island. The creature is purported to have the body of a rabbit and the horns of an antelope. This horned rabbit is elusive, powerful, and able to carry a tune.

Jackalopes are jackrabbits with the horns of an antelope. But they're also much more than that.

These horned rabbits are powerful and so fast that they're almost impossible to catch. But anyone who does catch a jackalope should use caution. Animal expert Dr. U. Ghota B. Kid-denme suggests that hunters wear stovepipes on their legs. Otherwise, they risk getting kicked, clawed, and gored by a rabbit with antlers.

The jackalope does have one weakness, however:

whiskey. Anyone hoping to catch a jackalope should leave the spirit out for them to find. Jackalopes love whiskey and, once intoxicated, they become easier to catch.

Since the jackalope is not native to the Buffalo area, Dr Kiddenme feels that this creature will be out of the Buffalo area by April 1st.

Mr. O'Dell Barkham may sound like he is super sophisticated but in reality, he is more of a down to earth guy that just loves life. He is a sniffer, hopper, runner, and walker just ready for his next adventure. He is super treat motivated so that will be amazing for him when working on training. This guy needs some work on manners as he doesn't realize his beefy handsome stronger size. We are sure that with the right work, outside time, snuggle time, he will learn what is needed. He does know how to sit for his treats, and takes them rather gently.

Ask Rusty – Should I Claim Early Due to Social Security’s Financial Condition?

Dear Rusty: I plan on retiring at 62, one year from now. I have been coached to (if financially possible) leave my Social Security earnings for my wife to collect in the future if I die, considering that she was a homemaker for the majority of her income-earning years. My instinct is to get Social Security coming (I understand I’m settling for a lesser amount at age 62) as soon as possible considering the forecast of our government’s inability to fund Social Security for the rest of my life. No one has a crystal ball, and no one knows what our government will or will not be able to fund even into next week, so we weigh what we know and see, and then decide. Is my question clear? Signed: Skeptical

Dear Skeptical: Well, your question is clear but contains two opposing factors – you say you wish to provide well for your wife if you die, but also say you wish to claim at age 62 because you’re not confident that Social Security (SS) will be there in the future. Yet claiming at age 62 will mean the lowest possible survivor benefit for your wife because her benefit as your widow will be the amount you are receiving at your death. I’ll try to put all this into perspective for you.

Although Social Security is facing some future financial issues currently, it will never go bankrupt and be unable to pay benefits. The worst that could happen, if Congress takes no action beforehand, would be that benefits will be cut by about 22% if the SS Trust Fund is fully depleted in 2033 (right now, reserves in the Trust Fund are used to supplement SS expenses because SS revenue is currently less than program costs). If that happens, Social Security can only pay out as much as it brings in. But that almost certainly won’t happen, because Congress won’t permit it to. Congress already knows how to fix Social Security’s financial issues – they just currently lack the political will and bipartisan spirit to implement the changes needed. But there’s little doubt that they will fix the issue before allowing an across-the-board benefit cut to over 65 million beneficiaries (because seniors vote). FYI, there was $2.9 trillion in reserves in the Social Security Trust Fund at the end of 2020.

I don’t recommend you make your Social Security claiming decision based on fear of the program going bankrupt – it won’t. Even if Congress doesn’t act and a benefit cut is imposed in 2033 (which is highly unlikely), a 22% cut to your age 62 benefit amount would be more painful than a 22% cut to your benefit at your full retirement age (FRA) which would be about 30% higher than your age 62 benefit amount. The longer you wait to claim, the higher your benefit, and your wife’s survivor benefit will be – even in the unlikely event of a later cut in benefits. Instead, I suggest you make your claiming decision based only upon your personal circumstances. If you wish to increase your wife’s survivor benefit, then waiting longer to claim is the way to do that. If you retire from working at age 62, Social Security’s earnings test won’t apply to you (the earnings test limits how much you can earn while collecting early SS benefits), thus you can certainly claim at 62 if you so wish. But it’s important to consider the consequences of claiming early (including a lower survivor benefit for your widow) and make a decision based on facts, not fear of Social Security going bankrupt – because it won’t.

Wehle School Of Business Ranks High In National Rankings

Wehle School of Business programs rank No. 8 throughout all of New York State.

The Richard J. Wehle School of Business at Canisius College is earning high marks among a series of national rankings.

According to U.S. News & World Report's 2023 list of "Best Graduate Schools," Canisius ranks as having one of the top graduate business programs in the nation. U.S. News & World Report also ranks the college's business programs at No. 8 throughout all of New York State and names Canisius for offering the top private MBA program in Western New York. The 2023 U.S. News Rankings similarly recognized Canisius for excellence in its accounting and finance programs, ranking in the top 6 percent and 7 percent, respectively, of all graduate business programs.

"These outstanding rankings are a testament to the Wehle School's long tradition of excellence," said Denise Roton-do, PhD, dean of the college's Richard J. Wehle School of Business. "It is a reflection of the exceptional knowledge and dedication of our business faculty, the high quality of our curriculum and rigorous program standards."

College Factual recognized the Richard J. Wehle School of Business on its list of "Best Value Colleges for Business Administration and Management."

Of the 876 colleges and universities reviewed by College Factual, Canisius College ranked No. 7 in the nation and No. 1 among colleges and universities in New York State. -more-

Add 1 – U.S. News & World Report Business School Rankings

College Factual recognized Canisius' business programs for offering a high quality education at a price lower than other schools of similar academic excellence. Rankings take into account the average yearly cost of the institution, average years it takes for students to graduate, total degree cost, affordability rank, location and financial aid.

The business programs at Canisius are housed within the Richard J. Wehle School of Business, which is an AACSB accredited institution. Fewer than five percent of business schools worldwide have earned this accreditation, which is a symbol of the highest standard in business education. The School of Business develops career-ready business leaders who are prepared to make ethical business decisions that reflect the interests of mulmultiple stakeholders. With its partners in the Western New York business community, the school's academic programs emphasize immersive, experienced-based learning activities reflective of the interconnected and global nature of business.

One of 27 Jesuit universities in the nation, Canisius is the premier private university in Western New York. Canisius prepares leaders – intelligent, caring, faithful individuals – able to pursue and promote excellence in their professions, their communities and their service to humanity.

Out Of A Covid Crisis Comes Opportunities

Shannon Connors, owner of Shannon Connors Fitness.

By Shannon Connors.

As Women's History Month ends we should reflect on the challenges women and small business owners face.

The saying "necessity is the mother of invention" rings true when COVID struck. Simply put, the seeds of innovation are planted by need.

It's happened before: transitioning from candles to electricity. Buggy whip to automobiles. Typewriters to computers. Rotary phones to mobile devices.

I'm a teacher with a passion for physical fitness. I opened my gym in 2015. When COVID lockdowns hit we faced a blunt realization: adapt or close.

My clients needed the physical and emotional benefits of exercising. For the sake of my family and clients I chose adaptation.

Our first modification was to utilize Facebook Live to stream workouts. There was an added benefit: they're saved as videos. This allowed folks to work out at their own convenience.

This enabled us to change the way we serve clients based on circumstances out of our control. We maximized technology to "invent" a way to keep our business open.

There was also a need to strengthen nutrition programming and offer positive, motivational resources for those suffering mentally.

Our gym created a comprehensive ten-week nutritional course that provides tips on clean eating, proper nutrition, vitamin regiments, and workouts. Inspirational videos keep customers informed and motivated. Clients loved it, especially stay at home moms. It allows them to stay in shape and work out when convenient for their schedules.

Two years later, we remain open. Shannon Connors fitness has a balance of customers that come in and work out in person, along with a steady clientele that exercises at home.

My message to other businesses: embrace technology, be open to innovation, and adapt to change that is out of your control.

Clearly the creators of the buggy whip, typewriter, and rotary phone didn't listen.

Shannon Connors is a small business owner named "Best Gym in 716" by the Buffalo News.
